About Terrazzo

At first glance, terrazzo's popularity appeared to be the inevitable Pinterest and Instagram-fueled digestion of a trend, one designed for #ihavethisthingwithfloors. From its earliest iteration as an economical way to employ marble fragments in fifteenth-century Venice to its most recent internet-fueled boom, terrazzo has always been prone to quick re-imaginings. Terrazzo has gone from old-world cafes in European capitals to shower curtains in American suburbs and It-spots in New York as the new internet craze.

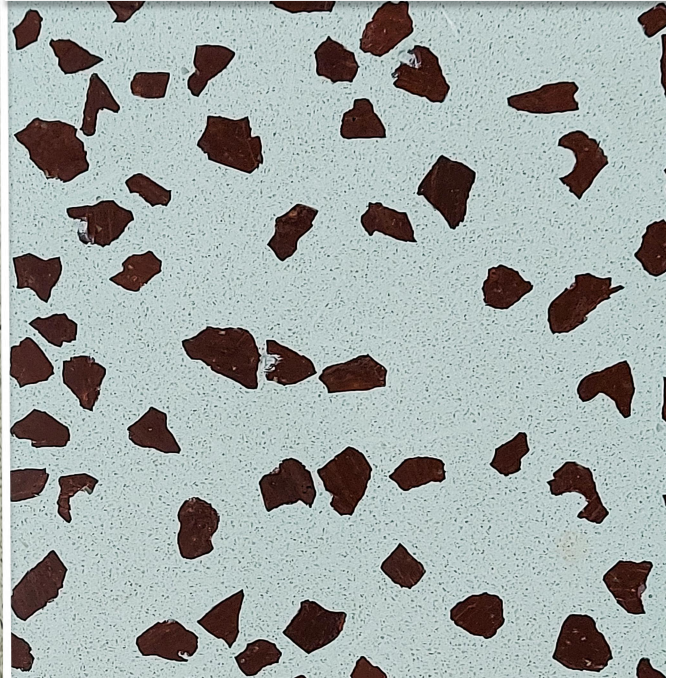

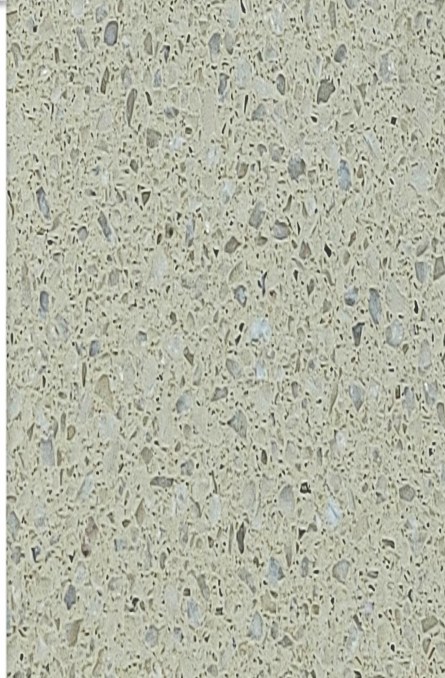

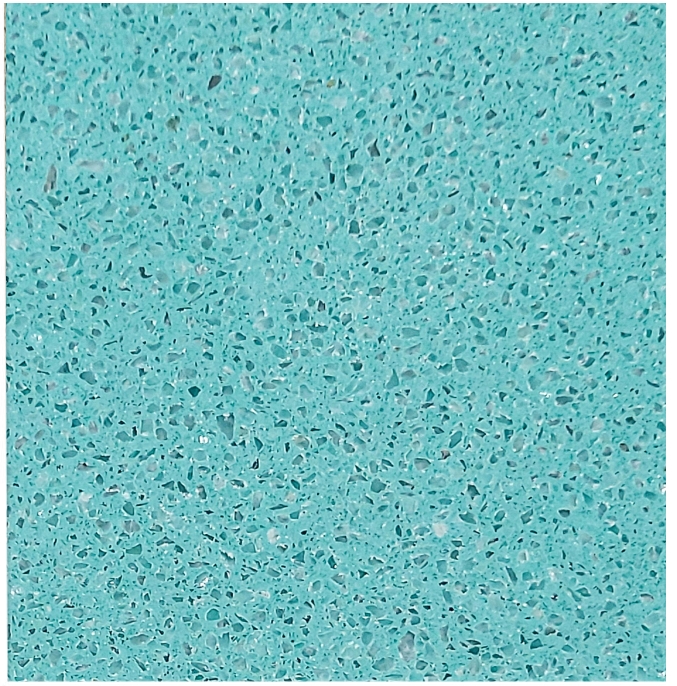

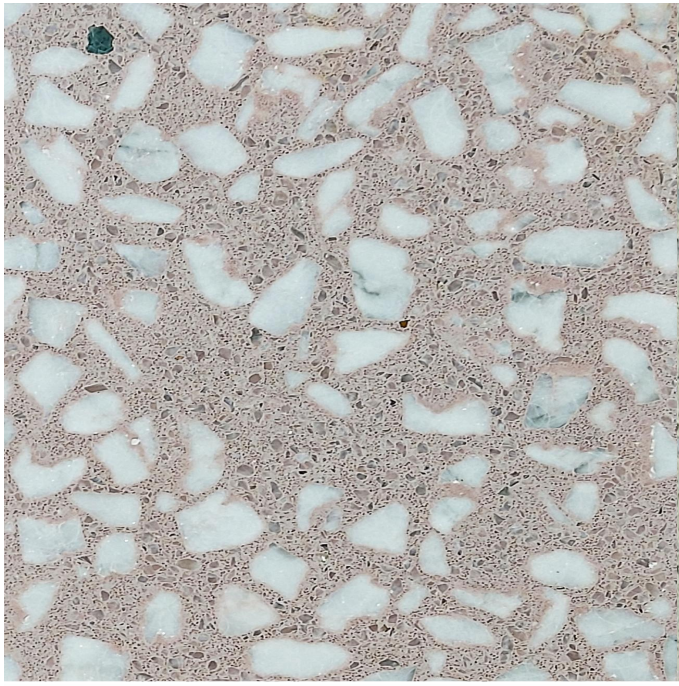

Versatility of Terrazzo

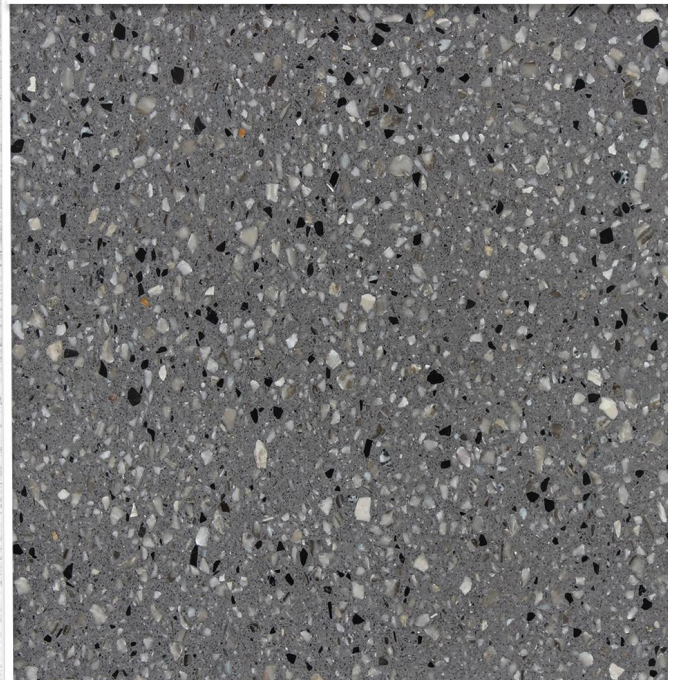

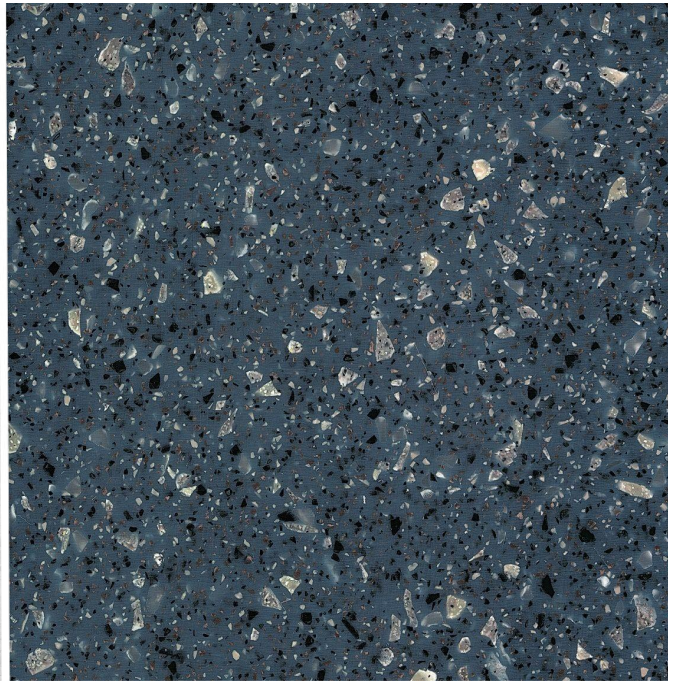

Terrazzo is a versatile material that can be used practically at any place. Available in bespoke colours, it is majorly used for flooring, base, walls, stair treads, countertops, and other custom products. It consists of chips of marble, granite, quartz, glass, shell or other suitable materials. The binder is either a cement or an epoxy matrix. As a result, it makes sense for architects and contractors to consider terrazzo as a material of choice, not only because of its environmental benefits, but also because of its durability and aesthetic appeal.
